"It is now two months since the French Ambassador, M. Constans, left Constantinople. His departure falled to produce the desired effect. On the contrary, even the quays and Tubini questions, which were settled by the Sultan's irades, femain unsatisfied."

The quarrel between France and Turkey is over the Sultan's attempt to buy back the concession he gave in 1891 to the "French Quaye Company."

The company built a fine system of docks and tramways in Constantinople and made so much money that the "Sick Man" grew envious. The Ambassador from France, M constans, left Turkey last August, and there have been no diplomatic relations between the nations since then. France claims that Turkey owes the oncessionaires $9,000,000 and has sent her Mediterranean flest around to collect it. Oscar S. Straus, ex-United States Minister to Turkey, says that the discriminated against in freight and wharfage charges by the French con-lives at No. 407 East Twenty-fourth street. He came to this country three years ago with a black trail behind him. According to the wife's story, the man turned brigand when he was but a thirtem-year-old boy. He became notorious before he was twenty-one as the worst of as bad a band of cutthroats as ever of as bad a band of cutthroats as ever infested the mountains of Italy. He killed a half-dozen men, and finally fell into the clutches of the Government and was sent to prison. He served more than seventeen wars and then was released on probation, being required to return to his home before nightfall and not to leave before daylight.

For a time he kept his parole and made an honest living as a teacher of music, as he has talent for the violin. His criminal instincts were so strong, however, that he relapsed and took to his old ways. He was recaptured and sentenced to ten years in prison. He escaped and came to this country, bringing his wife and little girl with him.
